YHWH told Moshe that everyone who had t'zara'at (most people think it was leprosy, but no one really knows what it was) or had touched a human corpse had to go outside the camp until they were clean.

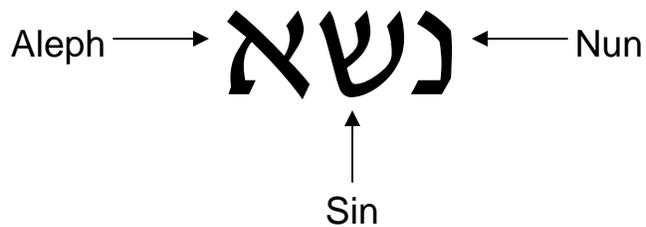

YHWH also told Moshe that if anyone took a Nazarite vow he had to abstain (keep away) from eating or drinking anything with grapes or raisins. They could not have any alcoholic beverage or vinegar. They could not touch a dead body, and could not cut their hair. If someone suddenly died next to them, they would have to break their vow and shave.

All the leaders of the tribes brought their offerings to the tabernacle. The priests took each leader's offerings on a separate day for twelve days in a row. Each leader took a turn to bring their own offerings on their appointed day. They each brought a silver bowl and a silver basin with fine flour mixed with oil, a gold ladle with incense, one young bull, one ram, one sheep in its first year, one buck (male goat), two cattle, five rams, five bucks, and five sheep.
