YHWH told Moshe to take twelve men, one from each tribe, and send them into Canaan, to spy out the land. They went into the land and stayed for forty days. They collected its fruit, checked out the people, and studied the land.

When they returned, they brought a huge cluster of grapes that was so big that they had to carry it on two poles. They gave a good report of the land, but were afraid of the people, because the people were strong, had greatly fortified cities, and were the offspring of giants. Calev, the son of Yephunneh, said that they could conquer the people, but the others kept telling the Children of Yisrael that the people were too strong and that they were like grasshoppers in the sight of the people.

The Children of Yisrael wept, saying that they would have rather died in Mitzrayim or the wilderness than by the sword. They even sought to appoint a leader to take them back to Mitzrayim. YHWH told Moshe that He would smite them with the plague, but Moshe told Him that Mitzrayim would hear of it, and that would not be a good thing. So instead, YHWH said that they would roam in the wilderness for forty extra years.

Afterwards, the people regretted what they had done, and decided to go take the land. Moshe warned them that YHWH would not be with them, but they went anyway and many of them were killed.
