YHWH commands us that when a man gives his word, he is supposed to do as he has said he would do. However, it is not exactly the same for a woman. Since a woman is supposed to be under the authority of her husband, then what she says effects him as well and he has the authority to void what his wife has spoken.

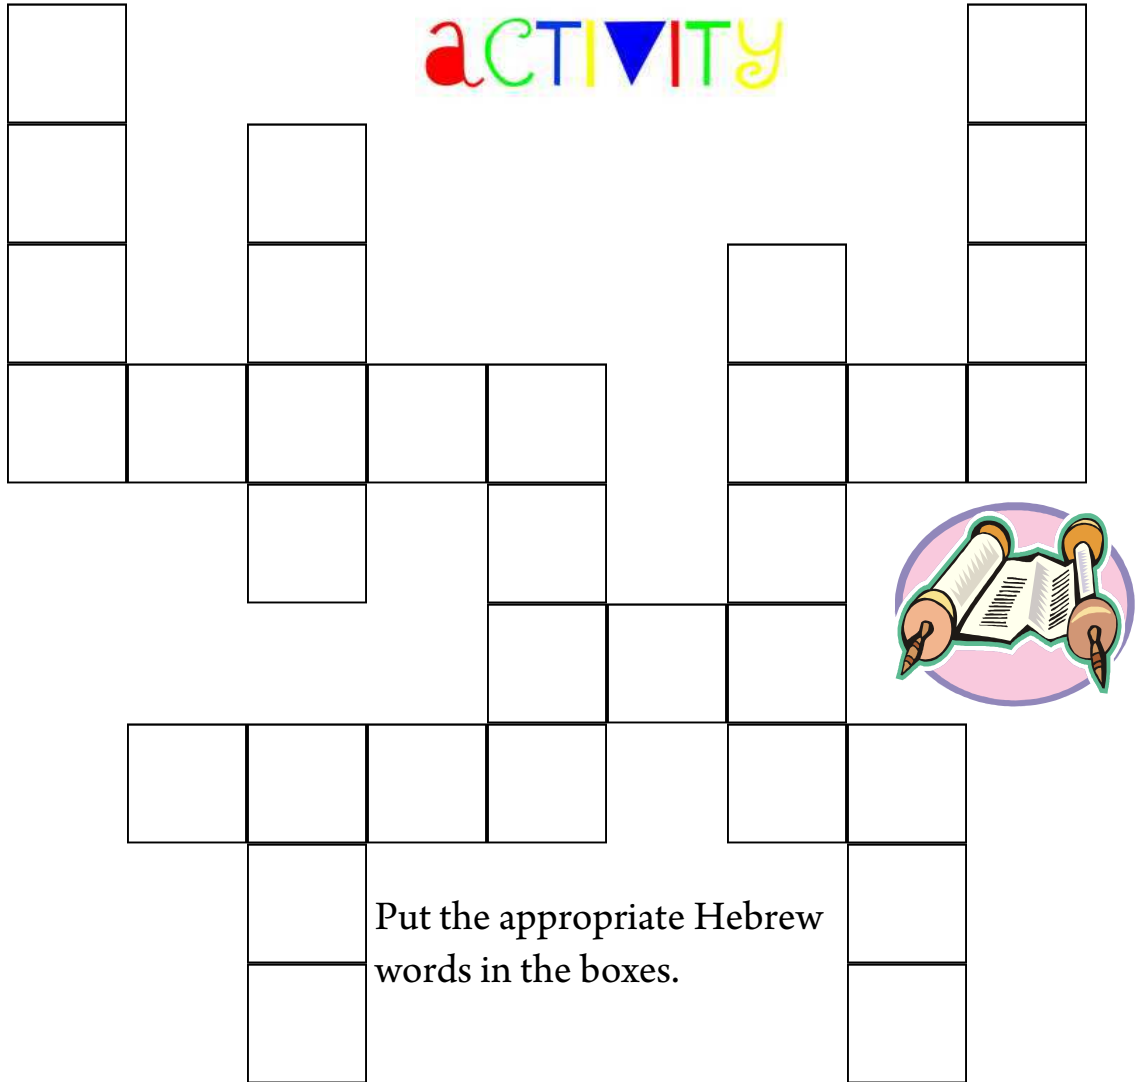

If a woman is not yet married and still lives with her father, then her father can void what she has spoken.

In both cases when a wife or a daughter speaks a vow or commits to do something, when the husband or father first hears of this, then he can void what his wife or daughter has said.

However, if the husband or father does not void it the first time he hears of it, then the word which his wife or daughter has committed to stands.

If the husband or father voids what his wife or daughter has spoken then she is under no obligation and she has not sinned. However, the father or the husband bears the sin of the broken vow.
